

“Growing apart”

When did the inches between us stretch into a land so wide?

a black and bubbling pit

a cavernous divide

a treacherous winding path filled with spears and sticks and knives

"ye who enter abandon hope"

on a warped and rotten sign

Where glinting teeth and beady eyes stalk every tortuous mile?

This once was a lush forest

Flowers bloomed in the soft breeze

If you listened closely

You'd hear songs whistling through the leaves

But now my dear it seems

The evergreens

Were never green

And those who would enter

surely die